Mark Barton is an anchor for Bloomberg Television and is the network's longest serving presenter in Europe, the Middle East and Africa.

He currently hosts Bloomberg Markets Americas and Bloomberg Markets European Close, which bring the most important developments of the financial and business day to a global audience.

Mark began his career as an intern at Bloomberg News in 1995. Six months later he was one of the five journalists who founded Bloomberg TV's European operations in London.

He's played an integral role in establishing Bloomberg Television as a global financial and business news network. Mark has witnessed at first hand three global recessions and covered five UK general elections and five US elections.

He's travelled the world to interview more than 10,000 newsmakers. They've included presidents, princes, prime ministers, members of the US Federal Reserve and most of the global business elite. Among his personal career highlights are interviews with Microsoft founder Bill Gates and the late Israeli leader Shimon Peres.

He is a true all-rounder. His professional interests range from politics to sport and film. His one professional regret remains not reporting from the red carpet at the Oscars ceremony in Hollywood.

Mark graduated with a bachelor's degree in History. He has three small children and lives in London.

A brief history of LSO St Lukes

A “superlative conceit” is how the biographer of architect Nicholas Hawksmoor, Professor Kerry Downes, describes the eye-catching tower above you at St Luke’s Church in London. “And what a tower,” says The Guardian’s architecture and design correspondent, Jonathan Glancy: “composed discordantly, but thrillingly, of an enormous, fluted, white stone obelisk rising improbably high into low London clouds. It is one of those towers that catch the imagination, a Wonderland conceit that raises smiles. It is crowned with a gold dragon (that cockney legend claims is a plague-carrying flea) and is among the battiest; yet potentially best loved, architectural follies in London.”

So what of the history? St Luke’s Church was commissioned in 1727 and its construction was financed by the Coal Tax.

The designers were John James and Nicholas Hawksmoor, partners who aimed to construct remarkable buildings that expressed the confident baroque artistry of Britain’s finest architects - matching their French and Italian rivals - while at the same time demonstrating the power of church and state to London’s rapidly growing, and somewhat unruly, 18th century suburbs.

Hawksmoor is significant as he had worked with his teacher, Christopher Wren, on some of London’s most famous landmarks including St Paul’s Cathedral, Chelsea Hospital, Hampton Court Palace and Greenwich Hospital. In his own right he built the awe-inspiring Christ Church Spitalfields.

St Luke’s was consecrated in 1733 but, despite its famous architect, it began to sink within a year. The principal difficulty was the marshy land of Moorfields around the church - not the most suitable terrain for a magnificent, complex building such as St Luke’s. Despite a renovation in the 1870s, nothing could stop St Luke’s slow but inexorable slide into the mire.

By 1959 the building had deteriorated so much that it was declared unsafe, its roof removed. For more than 30 years, the church was open to the elements, whilst the distant views across the city to St Luke's - north from the City of London along the market street of Whitecross Street - were obscured by new, broad-shouldered concrete buildings.

It remained in this derelict state until, in the mid-1990s; the London Symphony Orchestra was given a grant from the UK Lottery to develop the orchestra's community and education programme, LSO Discovery.

Architects Levitt Bernstein were commissioned to handle the necessarily sensitive restoration and modernisation, drawing on the practice's long experience in installing new, technically-sophisticated interiors for arts organisations in old buildings without compromising their architectural integrity or losing their history. The five-bay nave has become a giant music box, acoustically-sealed from the outside world and the hubbub of busy, noisy Old Street.

To ensure the integrity of Hawksmoor and James's design, the Jerwood Hall - the central rehearsal, teaching and performance space in which tonight's AIBs take place - is under a giant steel and timber canopy placed over and on top of the old stone walls.

The new roof and filigree steel truss and tree-like columns that support it, mirroring perhaps the immense live trees surrounding the building, are independent of the old structure. Some £18 million was spent on refurbishment with the Jerwood Foundation making a grant of £1 million for which it was rewarded not only with a magnificent space but also a place in history with the naming of the performance space.

Downstairs, in the hub of LSO Discovery, LSO St Luke's constantly buzzes with activity as a constant flow of groups makes music in the Clore Room while others play Balinese gamelan and use music technology equipment in the Candide Discovery Room.

LSO St Luke's is home to a range of live performances, with contemporary artists such as Bryan Ferry, Dave Brubeck, Sting and Elton John appearing here. Sir Elton has described this as one of the funkier venues in which he has ever performed, while classical performers include Sir Colin Davis, St Johns' College Choir and, of course, the London Symphony Orchestra.

Association for International Broadcasting

AIB is the international industry association for television, radio and online broadcasting. AIB is a not-for-profit, non-governmental organisation that represents, supports and lobbies on behalf of its members and the wider media industry.

AIB provides its members with member-exclusive market intelligence briefings, networking events, specialised consulting services, promotional and PR support and a range of other benefits.

AIB is in regular contact with more than 26,000 people working in electronic media globally: media executives, producers, editors, journalists, technical directors, regulators, politicians and academics.
