The Association for International Broadcasting is the only “not for profit” trade association that represents international media organisations across the globe.

The AIB offers a constantly evolving range of services to assist and support its international membership and has been doing so since 1993.

Among our services are the provision of market intelligence briefings helping Members make sense of the fast-moving marketplace, through to mission-critical support in areas such as cyber security and pandemic recovery.

As a result of the increased attacks on our members, the AIB launched a media freedom initiative in 2018 to combat these. We will collate and co-ordinate intelligence on threats to media freedom from across the operations of AIB Members and also work to promote media freedom to governments and the public as well as rapidly responding to issues as they arise. The AIB is a Member of the intergovernmental Media Freedom Coalition Advisory Network, representing the needs of broadcasting and media companies.

In addition, the AIB is a key advocate for our members on issues such as channel licensing in post-Brexit Europe, sustainability and journalist safety.

We are working with Royal Holloway University of London on the development of a major broadcasting cyber security research programme to help ensure that media companies are protected from cyber threats.

The Association's industry briefings – that provide reports and information on Members' activities – reach more than 27,000 people in key leadership and editorial roles in media companies in over 160 countries, as well as opinion-formers in regulators, parliaments and other key market areas.

Please talk to us about how the Association for International Broadcasting can help your organisation.
